

First Mokena Town Meeting Well Received; Speaker Defines "isms"

If enthusiastic response can be considered a criterion of success, then the open forum meeting held in the Mokena school auditorium last Thursday evening was a great success. The speaker, Werner v. Kuhlberg, Ph. D., in the one hour allotted him for his lecture, gave a comprehensive picture of Communism, Fascism and Nazism, pointing out the dangers which these foreign teachings hold for our democratic form of government. Although time did not permit the speaker to delve into these far-reaching problems, he nevertheless made it quite clear that in his opinion Communism represented 90 per cent of the present danger to our institutions, Fascism 9 per cent and Nazism 1 per cent. The explanation for this unexpected contention was this:

Communism is a doctrine of ideals which appeals to the masses, especially to the dreamers, be they in the ranks of the unemployed or among high-salaried college professors. Anyone who wants to know why Communism will not work as it is taught, should read communistic literature and then apply his common sense—not a dream pipe—to the contentions of this vicious doctrine. From this he will learn that Communism is not only impractical but that it is used as a screen for the terrors of absolute dictatorship. In reality, Communism undermines and then destroys all human rights and privileges which we here in America hold so dear.

Giving pointed illustrations from his observations gathered during his travels in Russia, Dr. Kuhlberg then proceeded to the second point of his lecture, Fascism and Nazism. While Communism deals with impractical ideals which are spread among dreamers to create class hatred, Fascism and Nazism deal with more realistic problems. Realistic problems do not promise the impossible, and therefore the people who embrace these two "isms" know from the very outset that they would have to forego certain rights for other seeming privileges. Hence they can blame nobody but themselves when they find that they have lost personal liberties. Communism, on the other hand, promises greater freedom, but gives absolute slavery. Under Fascism and Nazism, the speaker asserted, human rights, initiative and innate gifts are respected to a certain degree. Therefore, the family under Fascism and Nazism is an integral part of their respective doctrines, whereas family life under strict Communism is non-existent—or at least broken down considerably. The speaker compared the varied degrees of losses in personal, economic, social and religious freedom sustained under the foreign "isms", and said that they are not as pronounced under Fascism as they are under Communism, howbeit a natural outgrowth of all.

It was quite interesting to note the speaker's reaction to the "campaign waged against Nazism" which doctrine he condemned in no uncertain terms as being against our concept of free government—as compared to the "relatively lesser war against Communism". Nazism, he said, cannot be applied very well where so many people of varied ancestry are forming the nation. The regimentation of life under Nazism is tailor-made for the Germans who have been accustomed to it for generations and, therefore, do not mind the intensification of such regimentation. In our U. S., he said, it would not find many takers.

The speaker's remarks were interspersed with a healthy humor enlivening the informal talk. After the lecture, many questions were asked by those present, and a group of people remained even after the formal dismissal to satisfy their search for the truth of these "isms" and their respective dangers. Some of the questions asked by the audience gave the impression that Dr. v. Kuhlberg was suspected of advocating one of the "isms". However, the speaker made it very clear that he presented each "ism" from the viewpoint of a person who has embraced it. This was done in order that the audience might receive a true and clear picture of foreign teachings and the dangers they represent. Dr. Kuhlberg is a true American who is making every effort to awaken the consciousness of his fellow-Americans to the dangerous threat that threatens to undermine American principles of self-government. For that we thank him and deem it a privilege to have heard him.

Frankfort Student Makes Outstanding University Record

Among outstanding scholars in the University of Illinois College of Fine and Applied Arts is Corrine Krusemark of Frankfort.

An announcement made by Dean E. L. Newcomb showed that of the 738 students enrolled last semester in Fine and Applied Arts, 136 had scholastic averages of "B" or better, and seven of them had perfect "A" records. The college includes curricula in art, architecture, landscape architecture, and music.

Computed on a basis of 4 for B and 5 for A, Miss Krusemark, a freshman, had a scholastic average of 4.53.

One of Homer's Oldest Residents Passes Away

Friday morning death claimed one of Homer's oldest and most respected women, when Mrs. Clarence Bump, age 78 years, 10 months and 8 days passed away at the home of her daughter, Mrs. Stephen Ohla on Bruce Road.

Mrs. Bump, nee Miss Margaret Homerding, was born in Homer township on April 16, 1861 and lived her entire life in Will county. On December 14, 1892, she was united in marriage to Clarence Bump, also of Homer. To this union 4 children were born, two of which, Earl and Franklin preceded their mother in death. Mr. Bump also passed away several years ago. Since his death, Mrs. Bump has resided the majority of the time with her daughter, Mrs. Ohla.

Mrs. Bump has been in poor health for several years and Sunday she suffered a paralytic stroke, from which she never recovered.

She is survived by two daughters, Mrs. Clara Uthe of Orland Park, and Mrs. Viola Ohla of Lockport, one brother, Matthew Homerding, also seven grandchildren.

Funeral services were held from the Ohla home to St. Dennis church Monday morning. Burial was made in Brooks cemetery.

Thanks Mokena Red Cross Branch

The Will County chapter of the American Red Cross wishes to thank the Mokena branch for the help and co-operation in making its 1940 Roll Call a success.

Contributions now total $10,125 covering 6,500 memberships with some few industrial contributions still out.

This constitutes an increase of 73 per cent over last year's roll call and is far in excess of the approximate National increase of 25 per cent. It was the help and co-operation of our community which made the roll call the largest in the history of the Will County Chapter since the World War.

Yours sincerely,
H. W. Woodruff, M. D.
Chapter Chairman.

Soldier Seeks Shelter In Hallway

Sunday mid-night Mayor George Sangmeister received a telephone call from the Frankfort telephone office that a man was lying on the upstairs hall floor. Investigation revealed that the stranger was a soldier from the 5th division at Rantoul. Out of funds he was trying to get back to Rantoul by hitch-hiking. He said it was too cold to sleep out doors so he laid down in the hall way when he found a door open. He was given a place to sleep in the new village hall and Monday morning continued on his way.

MOKENA PTA OBSERVES FOUNDERS DAY

The monthly meeting of the Mokena PTA was held in the school auditorium Tuesday evening. The occasion was "Founders Night", the entire program was devoted to its discussion.

Mrs. Gertrude Williams, former State President, was scheduled to speak at this meeting, but due to illness, sent Mrs. Geissler to take her place. Being a loyal and devoted worker in PTA Mrs. Geissler spoke enthusiastically about the obligations and duties of all parents of children attending school.

The Mokena PTA is only nine years old, they can look back with no regrets to the work they have accomplished, and they want to urge more parents to visit the next meeting so they can see for themselves just what the PTA is doing and planning for their children.

The PTA feel their thoughts are well expressed by the few simple but well formed words spoken by Mrs. Geissler:

"It has been said that imitation is the greatest tribute, so in this month which brings the birthday of Abraham Lincoln as well as the birthday of our organization, we felt it permissible to take a page from the note book of the great President so with some alterations, omissions, and insertions, we have the Parent-Teachers version of this immortal Gettysburg address:

"Two score and two years ago, our Founders brought forth in this nation a new idea conceived and in sympathy and understanding, and dedicated to the proposition that all children should have an equal right to happiness.

"Now we are engaged in a great child-welfare movement, testing whether education, sympathy and understanding can create better citizens of tomorrow. We are met to do homage to our Founders. We are met to take stock of the work we have done. We have come together again to pay tribute to those who gave so generously of themselves, that all childhood might be enriched. It is altogether fitting and proper that we do this. But in a larger sense, we cannot over state, we can not praise too highly, we cannot over emphasize their vision and achievement. The brave souls who unselfishly toiled here, have envisioned a purpose far above our poor power to add or detract. The world will little note nor long remember what we say on this occasion, but it can never forget what they did in those early years. It is for us, rather to be dedicated here to the unfinished work which they who toil here have thus so far nobly advanced. It is rather for us to be dedicated here to the great task remaining before us, that from these honored Founders we take increased devotion to that cause for which they gave the full measure of their devotion; that we here highly resolve that the pioneers shall not have striven in vain; that this organization of the parents, of the teachers for the children shall not perish from the earth."

Mrs. Gertrude Williams is responsible for this "Teachers Gettysburg Speech."

At the close of the program a very impressive "Candle Light" service was presented by seven members of the PTA which explained briefly the seven objects of education. Those taking part were as follows: Miss Snure, Mrs. Thiel, Mrs. Needham, Mrs. Rauch, Mrs. Gaddis, Mrs. McGuire and Mrs. Cappel.

Hostesses for the month were: Mrs. Bennett, Mrs. Gunhouse, Mrs. Howes and Mrs. Stark.

Keep in mind the next meeting which will be March 19th.

Four Foxes Shot Near Mokena

Last Sunday 54 hunters engaged in a fox hunt along the creek bottoms and timber land near Mokena and shot four foxes. Those who shot the foxes were Harold Leonard, Joliet, Mr. Reiter, Homer, Maxwell Williams and Wesley Cappel, Mokena.

A number of other foxes were seen, but eluded the hunters. There appears to be an extraordinarily large number of foxes in this section this winter.

Another fox hunt will be held on Sunday, March 3rd. Hunters are to meet at 12:00 noon at Cappel Bros., elevator in Mokena. Only shot guns are to be used.

Skidding Truck Injures Woman

H. F. Yunker well known stock dealer of Orland Park, figured in a serious automobile accident near Blue Island last Saturday. He was driving his big cattle truck on a paved road near Blue Island. A bus was ahead of him. He saw a woman standing alongside of the road evidently waiting for the bus, but the bus driver did not stop until he had driven about 100 feet beyond where the passenger was standing. In attempting to stop his truck when he saw he could not pass the bus due to another car coming in the opposite direction, Mr. Yunker turned in a farm lane. The roadway was icy and the truck skidded into a tree. In swinging off the lane the rear end of the truck struck the woman, knocking her down and injuring her. She was taken to a hospital where it was found no bones were broken. Mr. Yunker escaped injury. The truck was damaged.

New Truck Law Has Stringent Provisions

The new truck license law which went into effect on March 1st has three very important clauses in it which every truck owner and operator will be obliged to obey or else be subject to a heavy fine:

1—To have their name and address painted or firmly affixed on both sides of the truck, and the classification identification ILL-P and the maximum empty weight of the truck, namely E. W. -3200 (i.e. real maximum weight) painted or otherwise on the right side of the vehicle. The name and address to be printed in letters not less than 2 1/2 inches in height and the paint line of same shall be at least half an inch in width. The classification identification and the empty weight of the truck shall be painted in letters not less than 1 1/2 inches in height and with paint lines of proportionate width.

2—To have public liability and property damage insurance or have made satisfactory proof of financial responsibility. The easy and cheap way is to carry insurance. The insurance companies, as a rule, will file certificates of insurance with the state so that the state may verify every licensed truck as having insurance.

3—The only other requirement for a private carrier is to have a certificate of safety on the windshield. The inspection must be made by an official inspection station.

In addition to the foregoing there are two other sections of the act that private carriers as well as all

Over 1000 Guests at Boy Scout Dinner

1347 Scout officials, parents of Scouts and friends of Scouting attended the annual Appreciation dinner and meeting of the Potawatomi Trails council held in the Homewood village auditorium Thursday night, February 22, to pay tribute to the leaders of the Council's 58 Scout units. Nearly 1000 people came early for the dinner which was served pot-luck style. Since the capacity of the auditorium was about 700 for banquet purposes, many of those who attended the dinner were com-others must in time conform to, namely section 24 which provides for future designation of routes which trucks are to follow thru or around any city, town or incorporated village. If and when this is done every truck where business does not require it to perform carrier service within such municipality must conform thereto and follow the outlined routes. The other requirement, Section 25, is as to continuity of truck operation by any one driver, namely more than a single 12 hours stretch at the wheel is a violation of the act. This probably will affect very few if any private carriers, altho the matter should not be entirely overlooked by same.

The penalty for non-compliance is rather severe, a $1,000 fine or a year in jail or both.

All carriers for hire must carry cargo insurance in the limits of $1,000 and $2,000 and he must also have his state number painted on the truck. Whether he hauls gold or garbage makes no difference.

Farmers who are hauling in their passenger car their groceries, household necessities, or a little merchandise that is incidental to their farming business need pay no attention to the act. A farmer who regularly hauls his neighbor's milk for hire becomes a local carrier for hire and must have a certificate but farmers who exchange accommodation hauling still remain private carriers.

Tractors on the highway which are not used for hauling do not come under the act. This would include tractors that may be pulling wagons and similar loads used in the regular farm business. The only trucks exempted from this law are township and municipally owned trucks.

Fire that police believe was incendiary wrecked the interior of the Bremen township relief office at 147th street and Cleveland avenue, south of Posen early Sunday. Many of the relief records were destroyed. Three investigations were ordered.

Lieut. Fred Mulhausen of the county highway police heads one. Frank E. Doherty, chief deputy state fire marshal, heads another. Leo M. Lyons, executive secretary of the Illinois Emergency Relief administration ordered the third launched by Raymond Hilliard, head of the fraud investigation division of the IERC.

Authorities were puzzled as to the motive for the fire. One suggestion was that it may have had some connection with an audit of the relief office books, which was begun Friday.

Police also were investigating a theory that disgruntled relievers might have been responsible. Otto Ziebell, township relief administrator, said he had received many threats from relievers. Ziebell, who also is Bremen township supervisor, returned Friday from a vacation. He told Mulhausen he delegated the relief work to Paul Blakemore on November 1.

The fire was discovered by Mrs. Lillian Hoven, 65 years old, relief office caretaker, who sleeps in the office building.

"I heard a window smashed," Mrs. Hoven said, "and saw a fire bomb land on the floor of the office."

Deputy Fire Marshal Raymond Dunkle, Jr., reported he found the charred remains of a burlap sack which evidently had been soaked in kerosene, inside the building.

Eugene A. Brown, colored investigator for the relief office, appeared while Mrs. Hoven was being questioned. Police arrested him on a charge of disorderly conduct, accusing him of interfering and being abusive. He was released on $25 bond.

There are 560 families on relief in the township. Relief expenditures range from $15,000 to $18,000 a month.

Two Bremen township relievers and several members of the relief staff were questioned Monday by investigators seeking the cause of the fire. Three investigators, Frank E. Doherty, chief deputy state fire marshal; Lieut. Fred Mulhausen of the county highway police, and Gerald A. Griffen of the Illinois Emergency Relief commission investigating staff did the questioning.

Doherty said the two relievers, Edward Mosel, 145th street and Albany avenue, Posen, and Pasquale Banna, 172nd street and Cicero avenue, had arguments in the relief station more than a month ago, but that both offered explanations as to where they were when the fire started.

The deputy marshal bore out police suspicions by stating that the fire was started by an arsonist. Rags soaked in kerosene were tossed into the record room of the relief office, Doherty said.

About 70 per cent of the relief clients are from Robbins, 10 per cent among the foreign population of the township and about 20 per cent are scattered thru Midlothian, Oak Forest, Tinley Park and other sections of the township.

NATIONAL AFFAIRS

Reviewed by CARTER FIELD

Many politicians believe Democrats have great advantage in late convention . . . Expect economy wave to wane as presidential campaign warms up . . . Belligerent minorities forced congress to continue Dies committee.

WASHINGTON. — No one really blames the Democratic high command for its convention date maneuvers. It is part and parcel, of course, of the uncertainty as to whether Franklin D. Roosevelt will run for a third term, but both that uncertainty and the determination of the Democrats to do their nominating AFTER the Republicans name their ticket gives the New Deal a tremendous advantage.

It is not a fair advantage. It is not sportsmanship, but politics is never fair or sportsmanlike. In fact the word "politics" in Washington is frequently coupled with two other words in revamping the old quotation, "All's fair in love and war."

Assuming two major parties, the normal practice ought to be for the party in power to hold its convention, tell the country what it wants to do in its platform, and name its candidate before the opposition goes through the same motions.

From the Civil war on until the first election of Cleveland this practice was followed, of course, because the Republicans were in power. When Grover Cleveland's second term was reaching its end there was the same uncertainty that there is now as to which way the party in power would face in the coming election.

Cleveland was for "sound money"—gold. Not until William Jennings Bryan stamped the Democratic convention with his famous "crown of thorns and cross of gold" speech was the position of the party then in power made clear. Of course it was not the course of the administration. The administration was defeated in that convention.

Which is the sort of exception which seems to prove that there is no great importance to the question of whether the party in power meets first or last.

Much Depends Upon What Roosevelt Decides to Do

This year the same uncertainty hangs over the Democratic course.

No one knows whether Roosevelt will be the nominee—whether it will be somebody Roosevelt approves and who promises to carry on the Roosevelt policies, or whether some conservative like John Nance Garner or Jesse H. Jones will be named.

It is entirely possible that this uncertainty will continue right up to the day the Democratic convention meets. It is within probability that the preferential primaries in the Democratic party will prove nothing either as to nominees or platforms. In fact, it is conceivable that the primaries might indicate overwhelming support for Roosevelt and a third term, and that then, after Roosevelt has declined to run, a conservative might be nominated because of the sheer weakness of the individual left wing candidates.

All of which, should it develop, will certainly put the Republicans on the spot. They would want, for instance, to draft a very different platform if the nominee were Roosevelt than if the nominee were Garner. They might plan the campaign along wholly different lines if they were to fight Robert H. Jackson than if they were to fight Sen. Harry Flood Byrd. Vic Donahue would present a necessity for one sort of attack, Henry A. Wallace quite another.

Congress Was Forced to Continue Dies Committee

So many people object to the Dies committee that there is general wonder why, when the test came in the house of representatives, the vote to continue the committee, even to the extent of giving it $75,000 for expenses in the midst of a spree of appropriation slashing, was so overwhelming.

The answer is very simple. Nearly every representative from the South and West has learned that a lot of his constituents are enthusiastic about the committee's work, and want it continued. Not only that, but a certain percentage of these rooters for the Dies committee are very belligerent about it. It is this minority, curiously enough, which is responsible for the size of the majority in the house for Dies. The members are scared to death of a very belligerent minority—they are not nearly so much afraid of a passive majority.

This is the whole essence of politics. Let us illustrate with a typical district in the deep South, which must be nameless, but whose representative told the writer about it.

This congressman had a lot of mail from his district about the Dies committee. As a matter of fact, a great deal of it was critical of the committee. But what jarred him was that about 500 of his constituents—and he either knew them or checked up on who they were—were almost fanatical in their letters.

Brought Out Various Lines of Reasoning

Their line of reasoning, he said, was that the subversive elements were attempting to throttle the Dies committee. Some of them thought it was Communistic influence. Some of them thought it was Nazi—though less of these. Others just thought it was part of a radical plot which aims at the overthrow of this government, and regarded the left wingers of the Roosevelt administration as part and parcel of the plot.

Now these letters, almost without exception, were from Democrats. If they had not been they would not have worried the congressman.

The point is that this fanatical minority of some 500, excited enough to write letters to their congressman, and so completely sold on the real danger to this government from subversive influences that it would be utterly impossible to unseat them, would be almost certain to vote in a unit against their congressman's renomination if he were to fail to vote to give more funds to the Dies committee.

Moreover, it is not so long since most of these partisans of the Dies committee were being thoroughly propagandized by an institution which, in addition to certain racial animosities, preached Americanism and the dangers of subversive influences. Dies is reaping, as a matter of fact, where Hiram W. Evans and other Ku Klux Klan leaders sowed. There is no attempt here to say that the pro-Dies rooters and the old Klansmen are the same groups. They are not. But the preaching of the Klan built up a sentiment which is tinder for the sort of stuff the Dies committee has been bringing out.

In fact, it was suspicion of a similarity between the Klan and the pro-Dies movement which resulted in the attempt to link Dies up with the Jew baiters, which embarrassed Rep. Frank E. Hook when the letters bought by Gardner Jackson proved to be forgeries.

Economy Wave May Wane As Campaign Warms Up

The probability still is that the economy wave now rising on Capitol Hill will wane. If it does not the whole presidential campaign is unpredictable not only as to candidates but as to issues.

President Roosevelt put forward a budget message which certain Republicans, including Alfred M. Landon, characterized as "phony." Most observers agreed that the whole idea was merely to put off the evil day—that later on in the session deficiency appropriations, for instance for relief, would have to be made which would more than offset all the cuts being made in the early money bills.

But congress took the bit in its teeth, and first shot out of the box the house appropriations committee saw the President's cut and went him one better, lopping off appropriations for two of the President's pet agencies, and slashing deeply into the shipbuilding estimate. This last, comprising four-fifths of the total cuts, was not very reassuring to an honest budget balancer, because the committee approved "authorizations" for shipbuilding later on. In short, it provided that this cut of $75,000,000 should be made in the budget for the year beginning July 1, 1940, but "authorized" the maritime commission to spend the money later.

Presumably, after Senator Dick and Representatives Tom and Harry have done their economizing, and carried favor with such voters in their states as are excited about budget balancing, the more pressing needs, especially those with a potent political motive, will receive attention from the lawmakers. That's what nearly everyone expects.

Sharpshooters Awaiting Developments, Guns Ready

But the sharpshooters attacking the administration on spending are of course perfectly aware of this, and waiting for the development with their guns trained on the spot where they are sure the target is going to be. And the gentry trying to make political capital meanwhile by voting for cuts know all about these guns of the sharpshooters.

For example, Sen. Robert A. Taft of Ohio. Now there are those who think Mr. Taft is a blunderer. There are even more, particularly in the New Deal crowd, who say his ideas about economy are the bunk.

As is often remarked about Taft's economy proposals, he may not be doing himself any good so far as his candidacy for the Republican nomination is concerned, but the Ohio senator is bad medicine for an opponent just the same.

All this is pointed out because there is a possibility—not a strong one, but it is there—that congress may be afraid to backtrack on economy; that it may continue to hack into appropriations, regardless of where the chips fall.

At the Barber Shop

By LILA MONTROSE
(McClure Syndicate—WNU Service.)

"DON, dear," said Don's sister as Don appeared home from the office early one Saturday afternoon, "I'm so glad you came home. I've been delayed so, and Jerry's hair is disgracefully long. Grandpa Baxter is coming tomorrow—it would never do. Be a dear and take Jerry down to the barber's and have his hair cut. And don't let them shave it up the back. You have to be very firm or they will."

"Oh, all right," said Don. "I'd planned to play golf—but all right." There was nothing very amiable in Don's voice, nor did he look more amiable when his married sister called him "a sweet angel of a brother."

The barber shop at Ventrey's children's store was crowded as usual on Saturday afternoon, and Don found that he would have to take a number at the desk and remain in the waiting room adjoining the barber shop.

Presently a portly, gray-haired woman bustled into the room, a slender young girl of eighteen or so in her wake.

"I simply can't wait," she said, looking appealing around the room for sympathy. "My theater tickets. I've ordered them for tonight, and they'll only hold them at the box office until four. I can't wait—and yet"—here she looked with a sigh at her young charge—"Maybelle needs a bob frightfully." Maybelle apparently was protesting that she could remain alone perfectly well. "I'm not a child, auntie," Don overheard.

The aunt's eyes had been wandering about the waiting room. She caught sight of Don Baxter, eyed him briefly through her lorgnette and then sailed over to him.

"I'm going to ask a favor of you," she began. "I simply can't wait with my niece, and you look as if you could be trusted. After you have your little boy's hair cut, will you see that they do Maybelle properly? Don't let them use those awful clippers at the back of her neck." She sailed out toward the elevator. Maybelle took a seat rather shyly beside her newly appointed guardian.

"Aunt Bernice is very nearsighted," she said. "She seemed to think you were as old as she is." Then there was a pause. "Isn't your little boy cunning?"

They waited fifteen minutes for Jerry's turn, and then Maybelle followed him into the barber shop and sat beside Don while he gave the barber directions concerning Jerry's haircut.

Then they returned to the waiting room and waited fifteen minutes more for Maybelle's turn and then Jerry and Don went into the shop with her to wait until she was properly bobbed and singed and waved according to instructions.

"Doesn't your wife wear bobbed hair, Mr. —?"

"Baxter—Don Baxter," supplied Don. And then: "My wife? Why, I haven't any wife."

"But Jerry's mother—is she dead?"

Don laughed. "His mother is my sister. Why, I'm just a youngster; only been out of college a year."

They were back in the waiting room and had taken their seats to await the return of the nearsighted aunt, Mrs. Talbot. In ten minutes came a telephone message, by means of paging, saying that Mrs. Talbot had had to go to her dressmaker's. She had forgotten that she had an appointment, and would the gentleman be so good as to take a taxi and bring her niece down to the Washington hotel, where the aunt would meet her niece—for tea.

Then Don remembered that he had arranged with his sister to meet her at the Biltmore at tea time. She was to be downtown and would take Jerry off her brother's hands then. So Don managed to telephone to his sister asking her to change the rendezvous from the Biltmore to the Washington.

Don and Maybelle felt like old friends when they entered the palm room at the Washington where they were to meet their respective relatives. To their surprise they found Mrs. Talbot and Don's sister already seated.

"Don, it's perfectly thrilling. Here's mother's old friend, Mrs. Talbot. You've heard her speak of Helen Talbot? I didn't even know she was in town, and here I happen to run into her while I'm waiting for you."

Introductions that followed were rather confusing, and it was not until tea was nearly over that the nearsighted Mrs. Talbot became quite clear in her mind that Don Baxter was actually the son of her old friend.

Six weeks later, after their first meeting at the barber shop, Maybelle and Don announced their engagement. Mrs. Talbot beamed with self-satisfaction. "I was attracted to Don from the first. I rather flatter myself that if it hadn't been for me this affair would never have come off."

And Don's sister smiled to herself and her friends when she spoke of the match. "Maybelle is just the sort of girl I always wanted Don to marry. I am so pleased to think that it was I who really brought them together."

CHOOSE DESSERT TO FIT MAKEUP OF MEAL

(See Recipes Below)

What Shall I Serve for Dessert?

To most of us "something sweet" served at the close of a meal is as important as the main dish itself. For dessert, men undoubtedly have a penchant for such substantial items as pie, ice cream and chocolate cake; but they seem to like the homey, less spectacular desserts almost as much. Baked apples, old-fashioned apple dumplings, rice pudding and fresh fruit desserts are masculine favorites and they're simple enough to suit the youngsters of the family, too. You'll find suggestions and recipes for the desserts that father likes, in my cook book, "Feeding Father."

When you choose a dessert, consider first the meal as a whole—is it substantial or light? If it's a hearty, heavy meal, choose a light dessert, because appetites are likely to be pretty well satisfied by the time the dessert course appears. On the other hand, if the meal has been light, a hearty, satisfying sweet course is in order.

Choose your dessert, too, to fit the general make-up of the meal. Don't forget that contrast is important. If you've had a fruit salad, avoid serving a fruit dessert; if Spanish rice or macaroni made up the main dish of the meal don't serve a starchy sweet.

And speaking of desserts: when your facilities for entertaining are limited, why not plan a "dessert party"? Invite your guests to skip their dessert at home, and have it with you. Dessert, with a beverage, is all you serve—and you serve it before the bridge playing or other entertainment begins.

grated rind and juice of 1 lemon
2 egg yolks
2 tablespoons cornstarch
1 cup boiling water
¼ teaspoon salt

3 teaspoons baking powder
½ teaspoon salt
¼ cup shortening
½ cup milk
½ cup orange juice
6 tart apples (medium size)
½ cup sugar
nutmeg
cinnamon
butter

Mix and sift dry ingredients and cut in shortening; add liquid. Roll dough to quarter inch thickness and cut in 4-inch squares. Pare and core apples. Place one apple in center of each square and fill center of apples with a mixture of sugar, cinnamon and nutmeg. Dot with butter and pinch the four corners of the dough together. Prick with a fork and bake in a moderate oven (350 degrees) for 30 to 40 minutes. Serve with lemon sauce.

White Embroidery On a Dark Color

By RUTH WYETH SPEARS

CROSS-STITCH is combined here with plain running stitches to make a smart luncheon cloth that may be embroidered quickly in coarse white embroidery thread. The material may be broadcloth or other smooth-finish cotton. The color is a deep maroon or the white design is very effective on this background. Deep blue or green are other fabric colors that are being used with white embroidery.

This cloth is made of two 1½-yard lengths of 36-inch-wide material. Split one piece lengthwise through the center and join to the sides of the other piece by machine. The seams are covered by the rows of running stitches. You do not need a stamping pattern to make the cross-stitch design. Baste coarse open-mesh embroidery canvas over the material; then follow the design given here at the lower left. Repeat the corner of the design to make the four corners of the center square.

NOTE: There are 36 embroidery stitches illustrated in Mrs. Spears' Sewing Book 2; also several original designs for table covers; men's ties; mittens; hats; purses; Baby's bassinet; doll's wardrobe; five ways to mend fabrics. EAST and WEST

BY TALBOT MUNDY

• TALBOT MUNDY—WNU SERVICE

SYNOPSIS

Captain Carl Norwood has been sent from his native England to the Kadur River district in India, along with his indispensable manservant, Moses O'Leary, soldier of fortune. Norwood's job is to survey the district to determine whether a valuable secret diamond mine belongs to the temple priests or to the ruler, the Maharajah of Kadur. Norwood calls on the British Residency to pay his initial respects. On his way he catches a glimpse of two women in a palace carriage, one of whom is young and beautiful. The other woman he knows to be the Maharanee of Kadur. O'Leary later tells him that the young woman is an American girl named Lynn Harding, who with her aunt, Mrs. Deborah Harding, is a guest at the palace. On a sightseeing tour Mrs. Harding sprains an ankle, and sends to the palace for aid. Prince Rundhia, handsome, spoiled nephew of the rulers, comes to her rescue.

Lynn Harding had been becoming troublesome. The skillful tyranny of Aunty's moneyed fostering had forced Lynn to postpone the natural rebellion of youth to an age at which some girls are steadying down. Lynn's rebellion had hardly more than begun. Aged twenty-two, she had been denied the democratic grace of college education.

Aunty, who held the purse-strings, knew that colleges corrupt; and what Aunty knew, was so. No one could change Aunty's opinions. Lynn hadn't tried to change Aunty. But she had learned to be strategic and even diplomatic. She had assented, without enthusiasm, to become engaged to a decadent F.F.V. But there, Aunty's first reverse had caught her completely off-guard. An immovable will and an irresistible explosive met. Lynn blew up. She didn't merely break the engagement. She smashed it. She scattered its splintered fragments recklessly.

So Aunty beat a strategic retreat. She decided on a world tour. It had been fairly successful, barring occasional incidents on shipboard and in hotels. The almost incredibly beautiful Lynn had received enough attention from unpedigreed, or at any rate uncultured, strangers to keep Aunty on the war-path.

The British officers in India had given Aunty plenty to worry about. So the invitation from the Maharanee of Kadur had come like a godsend. It gave Lynn a romantic outlet for enthusiasm in impeccably respectable surroundings, where there were no undesirable men to ruin Aunty's dream of a correct and socially influential marriage.

So this Prince was a staggerer. He had been absent when the Hardings arrived, frequently mentioned but not expected to return for several weeks from what was spoken of as a vacation. Aunty had had a good look at him in the full glare of the headlights of the Rolls-Royce. He was a worse shock than the undignified brute and the twisted ankle. He resembled one of those young Argentine plutocrats who used to corrupt Paris until the price of beef and wheat reduced them to the level of common mortals. A splendid figure of a man, perfectly tailored. Manners that only money can buy and cynicism support. Beautiful eyes, without a trace of effeminacy and not yet betraying signs of having lived too furiously. An all-conquering male. Heir to a throne as old as England's.

With astonishing strength he lifted Aunty from the earth and placed her on the soft-sprung cushions that made her sigh with physical relief and mental horror. Aunty knew she was up against it. The Prince drove her with skill. He avoided bumps. He damned the guard at the palace front gate with the voice of a cultured gentleman and a vocabulary that Aunty instinctively knew was scurrilous. At the arched entrance to the guesthouse patio, he lifted her out. He caused servants to come like firemen to a burning house. He sent immediately for his private Bengali doctor, a member of his own household.

"Competent, Mrs. Harding, I assure you. Discreet, I guarantee." Almost simultaneously with the arrival of the Bengali doctor, who looked devilishly discreet and more afraid of Aunty than if she were the devil's own widow, the Maharanee's carriage drew up, with its horses' noses snorting on top of the Rolls-Royce.

Out got Lynn, too full of excitement and alarm and fun and sympathy to remember she should veil her face. She could hear her aunt through the open guesthouse window. Lynn came running into the glare of Rundhia's headlights.

"Who are you? What is wrong with Aunty?"

"Your aunt has hurt herself. My physician and some women are exploring for broken bones. I believe it is nothing serious."

Aunty, it was obvious, thought otherwise. She wasn't liking the doctor. She was calling him a fool, and she could make the word sound like a description of a flunkey caught stealing.

The Maharanee had to be ceremonially helped out of the carriage. She, too, had heard Aunty's yells. She was overflowing with eagerness to overwhelm an injured guest with kindness, but she couldn't run as fast as Lynn. And then Rundhia stood in the way, smiling, careful not to embarrass Lynn with gallantry.

"Nothing," he said in English, to the Maharanee. "A twisted ankle. A bruise. A little badly shaken. I believe. My doctor is attending to her. Won't you introduce me to the goddess?"

The Maharanee purred. She unveiled her face. She put her arm around her lamplight protégée:

"Lynn darling, this is my nephew Prince Rundhia. He is a bad boy, but I do hope you will like each other. Rundhia, this is Miss Lynn Harding, who is teaching me how Americans do things; and I am having such fun pretending she is one of us. I wish she were! Oh, how I wish it."

Presently, when the doctor came out, Rundhia eyed him in the lamplight with a stare that made the Bengali flinch. He did his best to look like a confidential, dignified retainer, but it didn't work. Aunty had broken his dignity, and his fear of the Prince had no covering left. He almost stammered:

"Nothing broken. Tape—iodine—bandages. She will soon recover." He made a sudden, nervous effort to regain the feeling of being important and on the inside of events.

"Have you heard that Captain Norwood, of the Royal Engineers, has arrived? He is in camp outside the city."

"Wonderful! But no, that won't do!"

"He has with him an Eurasian named Moses O'Leary who, they say, already is poking his ugly nose into what is none of his business."

Lynn Harding stood examining the Rolls-Royce. She was quite used to luxury, but even Hollywood owned nothing like that thing. Its gadgets and gold-plated adornments were a sufficiently good excuse for giving Aunty's temper time to cool off. So she lingered, letting the Maharanee go alone into the guesthouse. Aloneness, of course, included three servants, but a Maharanee is lucky who endures only six eyes to watch what she does, and six ears to hear what she says. Lynn could not hear what Prince Rundhia was saying to the doctor, but he was doing all the talking and she felt fairly sure that he was talking about her.

He strode toward her looking as dead as Mephistopheles. Lynn fell on guard.

"You win," said Rundhia.

"Win what?"

"Whatever you came for."

"I came for a good time."

"Uh-uh? Been having it?"

"Yes. Your aunt has been conducting me into Indian mysteries."

"We have none," said Rundhia.

"We are an open book. We are three hundred and fifty million people, every single one of whom carries his heart on his sleeve. You are the mystery. Have you a heart? Where is it?"

Lynn laughed: "Is that any of your business?"

"Of course it's my business."

"Why?"

"Because you are the most beautiful mystery I have ever seen. Every mystery is an invitation to find the right key."

"Oh, are you a detective?"

"You bet I am. I've detected your cruelty. You intend to keep me guessing. I can't endure it."

Lynn laughed again: "Should I pity you?"

"No. Pity and compassion are the twin curses of India. We're so compassionate to one another that we hate one another for not being even more miserable than we are, so as to be able to mop up greater floods of useless pity."

"So you're an iron man?"

"No—nor a jellyfish. I have a leathery disposition, due to talents that have dried from lack of use."

"Oh, are you lazy?"

"No. Iron has entered into me."

It's like a spur that dug too deep and keeps on working inward. It irritates abundant energy that has no outlet. Add boredom to that, and what have you?"

"It sounds like an explosive mixture. Aren't you afraid you may blow up? I believe you're sorry for yourself."

"Sorrow is not in me," he retorted. "I don't know the emotion."

"Not even when you make mistakes?"

"I never make them. A mistake is what a fool does to an opportunity. All that I have lacked until now is a real opportunity."

Mrs. Harding's voice came through the guesthouse window sharply impatient:

"Lynn! Lynn! Where are you?"

"All right, Aunty. I'm coming."

Experienced tyranny knows countless ways of compelling submission. Aunty groaned on a sumptuous bed:

"No, don't let me trouble you. Don't let me be a nuisance. I am sure that the cares of a palace must be more than enough. You must try to forget my existence. Lynn can look after me."

Lynn's eyes met the Maharanee's—deep unto deep. The Maharanee looked rather like a New York East-side Jewess who has risen through the ruck of immigration to the ranks of affluence and prestige. Full-bodied, matronly, kind, but aware that the world is full of pitfalls; aware that the world needs kindness, but can misinterpret and cruelly resent good intentions. She had the genius, gentleness, iron. She had also a will that no Deborah Harding could bully to obedience.

Lynn undid a necklace from the palace heirlooms, and handed it to the Maharanee. She began to remove a bracelet, but the complicated fastening prevented. She held out her wrist.

"Please. I must get into some clothes that Aunty thinks respectable and stay with her."

The mild, plump Maharanee countered with surprising firmness:

"Darling, we will expect you to dinner. Yes, I will take the jewelry because it must be returned to the Keeper of the Jewels. I will choose two women from my own attendants who shall take care of Mrs. Harding."

She almost flounced out, giving Aunty no time to reply. There was silence until the drum-beat of the horses' hooves died away along the drive in the direction of the palace. Then Aunty spoke:

"This comes of making social concessions. I never heard of such audacity. Did you hear her speak to me as if I were a servant or a charity patient? Go and take off that immodest costume. It suggests a fancy-dress ball in a bad house."

"Aunty, the doctor has promised to return with something to relieve the pain, so that you will get some sleep."

"Sleep! While you are doing what in the palace? Do you think I am deaf, blind? Do you think I have forgotten your flirting on board ship and in hotels until I blushed for you? I heard you, through the window, talking to Prince Rundhia."

"Aunty, I think I hate you. It makes me feel mean and ungrateful. I would so much rather love you."

"I have left off hoping to be loved," said Aunty. "I demand your respect. That may teach you to respect yourself and so merit the respect of your equals. Love? Gratitude? Illusions! I have learned that."

Lynn went and changed into black silk Chinese pajamas. They would remind Aunty of that fancy-dress ball on board ship, when the penniless son of a Tirohot planter had made the pace so hot that Aunty nearly had fits. Lynn stared at her own reflection in the mirror, not quite liking it. She smiled at herself, just to see what the smile would look like.

The Maharanee returned from the palace, excited, fawned on by four women. Two meek men-servants followed her with baskets of provisions. Lynn ran to greet her. The Maharanee almost squealed at the sight of Lynn in black pajamas with her golden hair massed in becoming contrast.

"Wonderful! But no, that won't do! Yes it will, yes it will! I forget. I am so excited, I forget! We are to have an informal supper party at the palace, instead of dinner—truly, truly unconventional—modern—a picnic!"

"Oh, my God!" said Aunty.

But the Maharanee could be as deaf as Fate when it pleased her to be. She continued, almost breathless:

"His Highness my husband" (she always spoke of the Maharajah as His Highness my husband) "has heard that Captain Norwood is in Kadur. Captain Norwood is a Royal Engineer. He is said to be a man of great attainments. His Highness my husband is very eager to be pleasant to him."

"Engineer?" said Aunty.

"Yes, he is to make a survey of the Kadur River. It would not be etiquette to notice him until after he makes his formal call, which he should do tomorrow. However, I persuaded His Highness my husband, who is a very conventional man, but now and then he listens to me." She turned to Aunty: "We are so, so sorry, Mrs. Harding, that you can't be with us."

"I will spare you that regret," she answered. "I will be there. You have a rickshaw? Your women can help me to dress, I don't doubt. Lynn and I will be leaving as soon as I am fit to travel. A last supper in your palace will be something to remember."

"Oh, how gracious of you," said the Maharanee. "But are you quite sure?"

The Bengali doctor appeared, cautious, with a bedside confidential air that did not, however, prevent the Maharanee from instinctively veiling her face.

"Mrs. Harding, I have a little pellet for you, just one little pellet, prepared specially."

"Thank you, I don't take pellets." The doctor hesitated. The Maharanee spoke through her veil:

"Mrs. Harding is coming to supper at the palace."

"Oh?" said the doctor. "Well, perhaps she will take the medicine at supper. Shall I send it by a servant? She should take it with a little piece of bread or with a glass of water."

"Thank you, you needn't trouble," said Mrs. Harding. "I need no medicine."

"Come, Lynn." The Maharanee could hardly wait while Lynn looked for a wrap.

"So long, Aunty. See you later." "Does she never consult an astrologer?" the Maharanee asked.

Lynn laughed: "She did once—and only once!"

"But you? You believe in them?" "I think the answer is no. I know so little about them—practically nothing. But aren't they charlatans? I've always been told that they are."

"Oh, many of them are," the Maharanee admitted. "There are charlatans in all professions. We have a very good court astrologer. I will order him to cast your horoscope. In fact, I have already consulted him about it."

"What fun! But please do keep it secret from Aunty. She would have conniption fits."

No Explanation Offered for Planet Mystery

Astronomers of the late Nineteenth and early Twentieth centuries spent some 40 years disproving the discovery of a new planet between Mercury and the sun, writes Dr. Heber D. Curtis, director of the University of Michigan observatories, in an article in the Michigan Alumnus Quarterly Review.

During the total eclipse of 1878, says Dr. Curtis, two bright, star-like objects near the sun were observed by Michigan's Prof. James Craig Watson, one of America's leading astronomers and, according to former President James B. Angell, the most brilliant man ever graduated from the University of Michigan. The existence of a planet inside the orbit of Mercury had long been predicted by theoretical astronomers, he writes, although the body had never been seen. Watson's observations, therefore, he says, were heralded as the discovery of a new member of our planetary family. Confirming Watson's discovery, he adds, were the observations of Prof. Lewis Swift, who saw one of the bodies only a few seconds later than Watson during the same eclipse.

Not until the observations of the total eclipse of 1918 did scientists give up Watson's discovery as a mistake, although no one had ever been able again to observe either of his two intramercurial bodies. During each eclipse from 1878 until that time, astronomers set up and ran intramercurial cameras in the search for Vulcan, as the "theoretical" planet had been named.

"These famous observations of Watson's," Dr. Curtis asserts, "defy any satisfactory explanation. Perhaps as probable a theory as any is that he saw a moderately bright comet with an almost stellar nucleus." The relatively strong illumination of the sky background, he explains, would have prevented the detection of a tail, while the failure of astronomers to find the comet after it had left the immediate vicinity of the sun is explained by the fact that all comets enormously decrease in brilliance as they leave the sun, and a small one observed near the sun might never be seen again because its light would diminish by hundreds of times within a short time. While this theory may explain one of Watson's intramercurial objects, says Dr. Curtis, no explanation has been offered for the other.

IN THE UPPER ROOM

LESSON TEXT—Matthew 26:17-30.
GOLDEN TEXT—This do in remembrance of me.—I Corinthians 11:24.

Men sometimes stand at the crossroads of destiny quite unaware of how much hinges upon their choices and actions. One wonders whether the disciples realized that as the Passover drew to its end and the great memorial feast of the new covenant was established, they were witnessing the end of the old and the beginning of the new. It is certain that Jesus did realize the high import of that hour. He knew He was about to go to the cross, toward which the Passover had pointed throughout the centuries and back to which cross we in the Lord's Supper continue to point as we remember His death until He comes.

We are indeed on holy ground as we go with Him then as He meets His disciples alone in that upper room for a time of fellowship with them as He observes

I. The Last Passover (vv. 17-20).

"Here we see the perfecting and the passing of the old economy and the beginning of the new. The Passover was observed, the feast of deliverance from slavery, the feast of the exodus, the feast of hope. Men had kept it fitfully through the long centuries, regularly at first and then occasionally through the age of decadence. The King sat down to keep it as one of the nation and the people. That was its last keeping in the economy of God, because all that it had foreshadowed was fulfilled as He sat at the board, and all that it had pointed to found the ultimate fulfillment in Him. He completed that of which the exodus had been the preparation. The final exodus came by the way of that cross to which He was going" (Dr. G. Campbell Morgan).

II. The Betrayal Predicted (vv. 21-25).

What precious fellowship the twelve and their Lord must have had around that table in the upper room as they celebrated the great feast of their people. Think what a shock came to them as in the midst of this fellowship Jesus quietly and solemnly made the astonishing prediction, "Verily, I say unto you, that one of you shall betray me."

Their joy was changed to exceedingly great sorrow as they asked, "Lord, is it I?" Apparently Judas had maintained such outward conduct as to turn no suspicion in his direction, even though all along he had in his heart the blackest of treachery against his Lord. It is a sad and soul-searching fact which is here revealed, that it is possible for one to make a high profession of faith in Christ and even so to live as to give no cause for criticism, and yet to be unregenerate and in fact the enemy of Christ.

Observe (v. 24) that while Jesus was betrayed and went to the cross in fulfillment of prophecy, that fact did not in the slightest justify His enemies who brought it about (see Acts 2:23, R. V.).

III. The First Communion (vv. 26-30).

Taking the unleavened bread and the unforgotten wine of the Passover, which had just been observed by Him for the last time, Jesus established a new feast, the Christian feast of remembrance, which we commonly call "communion" or "the Lord's table."

As we have already suggested, it is a feast of remembrance. "For as often as ye eat this bread, and drink this cup ye do show the Lord's death till He come" (I Cor. 11:26). At the Lord's table His followers find spiritual strength in remembering His death for them, and they also find joy as they remember that He is to come again. In doing so they testify to the world that they believe in and cherish these truths.

This feast is also rightly called "communion," for down through the ages and until He does come the saints of God have at His table sweet communion, first of all with Him, and then with one another.

We also note that our Lord spoke of the cup as "my blood of the new testament." The word "testament" means "covenant." The Lord's table therefore speaks of our allegiance to Him, of our loyalty to our Lord, and our devotion to His service. The Christian church therefore speaks of the communion service as a sacrament, a word taken from the Latin sacramentum, meaning "oath," and essentially an oath of allegiance.

His body was broken for us, His blood was shed for the remission of our sins. We are bought with a price, we are not our own. Therefore we are to glorify God with all that we have and are.

HOUSEHOLD QUESTIONS

It is not too early to look over window screens. Mend and paint them now so they will be ready when it is time to put them in.

For Leather Chairs.—Rub equal parts of linseed oil and vinegar, well shaken, into leather chairs, occasionally. It keeps them in good condition.

When poaching eggs, let water come to a full rolling boil, drop eggs into it, turn out gas and eggs will finish poaching in the boiling water.

Save the Buttons.—The continual ripping off of buttons by the clothes wringer can be prevented by folding the buttons inside the garment and holding it flat as you turn it through the wringer.

When sprinkling flat pieces, such as towels, pillow-slips, napkins, curtains, handkerchiefs, and so forth, for ironing, dip one article in five in clear water, squeezing, not wringing, as dry as possible. Lay flat two dry articles, then one wet one, then two dry, and so on, rolling tightly, when all are done. There will be no dry spots and every piece will be a good even dampness. It is a pleasure to iron clothes dampened this way.

That Nagging Backache

May Warn of Disordered Kidney Action

Modern life with its hurry and worry, irregular habits, improper eating and drinking—its risk of exposure and infection—throws heavy strain on the work of the kidneys. They are apt to become over-taxed and fail to filter excess acid and other impurities from the life-giving blood.

You may suffer nagging backache, headache, dizziness, grinding hip joints, leg pains, swelling—feel constantly tired, nervous, all worn out. Other signs of kidney or bladder disorder are sometimes burning, scanty or too frequent urination.

Try Doan's Pills. Doan's help the kidneys to pass off harmful waste. They have been more than half a century of public approval. Are recommended by grateful users everywhere. Ask your neighbor!

BOY SCOUT NEWS

Troop 40 Mokena held their meeting Monday night with Erwin Howes the assistant scoutmaster in charge. The boys have a patrol formation in which the formal part of the meeting is conducted. Ten seconds are allowed for all boys to get into their rank.

After roll call about 20 minutes were taken to learn the fundamentals of drilling which includes correct posture. Also as part of the drill was about 15 minutes of exercises which certainly works wonders in tiring boys.

Five boys were given application blanks to be filled and these will be given prompt attention so that these boys will become official members of the great organization, the Boy Scouts of America.

About three fourths of an hour was spent preparing these new boys for their tenderfoot requirements. Meeting was adjourned at 9:05 with the scoutmaster's benediction.

CHRISTIAN SCIENCE CHURCH

"Mind" was the subject of the Lesson-Sermon in all Churches of Christ, Scientist, on Sunday, February 25.

The Golden Text was, "Great is our Lord, and of great power: his understanding is infinite" (Psalms 147:5).

Among the citations which comprised the Lesson-Sermon was the following from the Bible: "The Lord giveth wisdom: out of his mouth cometh knowledge and understanding" (Proverbs 2:6).

The Lesson-Sermon also included the following passages from the Christian Science textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," by Mary Baker Eddy: "Mind is God. The exterminator of error is the great truth that God, good, is the only Mind, and that the supposititious opposite of infinite Mind—called devil or evil—is not Mind, is not Truth, but error, without intelligence or reality. There can be but one Mind, because there is but one God; and if mortals claimed no other: Mind and accepted no other, sin would be unknown" (p. 469).

HOMER

Mrs. Fred Kopelman

Joseph Miller, Jr., is suffering from an infection in his foot.

Mrs. Wm. Lister and Mrs. Fred Kopelman attended the Home Bureau meeting in Frankfort on Tuesday afternoon at the George Elsner home.

Pupils from this vicinity who are attending the Lockport and Joliet schools, enjoyed a day's vacation Thursday in celebration of George Washington's birthday.

The Homer Dramatic club held their regular business meeting at the home of Miss Monna Milton Tuesday evening. Reports were read and committees appointed for the remainder of the year, after which the young people enjoyed a game of Chinese checkers. Refreshments were served.

Lila Konow, who is staying with her aunt, Mrs. Adam Bodenschatz in Lemont, during her confinement in a cast, is reported to be much improved and will have the cast removed soon.

A goodly number from Homer enjoyed the oyster supper and card party at the Colonial hall in New Lenox Friday night. The party was given by the Maple Street Arbor of Gleaners for the members and their families. Approximately 160 were present for the supper. Guests from other arborers were: Mr. Fortin, state manager from Kankakee, Mr. and Mrs. J. R. Leist of Joliet, Mrs. Nellie Goodnecht and Mrs. Hackett of Kankakee and Mr. and Mrs. Guy Everton of Plainfield. After the supper euchre, pinocle and bunco were played. Dacing followed the games with Lea's Melody boys furnishing the music. Everyone voted it a nice party. Another interesting feature was the fact that the date was the same as several local Gleaner members birthdays: Edd Marshall, Elmer Rowley and Roscoe Dryer, hence the birthday song was sung.

Mrs. James Frazer is ill at her home with influenza.

Leo Ruettiger has been detained from his duties with the Standard Oil company by illness.

Kenneth Lauffer is spending several days at the home of Mr. and Mrs. LaVerne Lauffer in Joliet.

THE NEWEST LIGHT SOURCE

Fluorescent Lamps

...what they are...how they work

The idea of a Fluorescent light source has long been in the minds of scientists. Centuries ago, it was first discovered that many hundreds of rocks, chemicals, organic and inorganic substances have the property of becoming luminous, or fluorescent, when exposed to certain radiation. From the continued study of this phenomenon has come the development and refinement of what is now known as Fluorescent lighting.

Fluorescent lamps, made possible by these discoveries, are amazing new sources of light. They are slim glass tubes, giving off richly glowing illumination like daylight or in abundant color. They do not contain filaments like ordinary bulbs and tubular lamps. Light is produced through the agency of invisible radiation acting on fluorescent powders with which the inside of the tube is coated. This radiation is created by the flow of electricity through mercury vapor generated in the glass tube. The fluorescent powders are highly efficient converters of this radiation into light.

In the short time since their introduction, smart restaurants, stores, shops, night clubs, businesses and industries of many kinds have adopted the use of Fluorescent lamps to striking advantage. Visitors at the San Francisco and New York World Fairs marvelled at the colored lighting effects obtained with new type lighting. What has caused this sudden interest in and acceptance of Fluorescent lighting? Novelty, for one thing. Fluorescent lighting is new, different, unique—so distinctive that interest in this new lighting method has increased a hundredfold in two short years.

But novelty is not all. The quick success of the Fluorescent lamp is largely due to certain unique advantages which have led to many installations in streamlined and "plus" lighting.

Its size and shape allow freedom for creative design. The small cross section of the lamp is convenient for recessed lighting and modern fixtures, and by combining Fluorescent lamps in various sizes and color selections, many interesting applications are possible.

The highly efficient generation of strong and pure colored light is one of the Fluorescent lamp's outstanding advantages. Lamps are available to produce daylight, white, gold, blue, green, pink and red. The daylight lamp emits light giving a cool, bright effect that shows colors in their outdoor appearance.

Other advantages are inherent in the Fluorescent lamp. It permits higher lighting intensities with existing wiring when used with proper auxiliary equipment. The surface temperature of the Fluorescent lamp is so low it can be touched without discomfort. Because light is emitted quite uniformly from the entire length and surface of the tube, glare is reduced and Fluorescent lamps are therefore often useful for exposed lamp applications.

Fluorescent lamps for stores, shops, theatres, restaurants, offices and businesses of many kinds are offered in a variety of sizes including 48 inch (40-watt) 36 inch (30-watt), 24 inch (20-watt), and 18 inch (15-watt). And although no equipment is as yet widely available for homes, special installations of Fluorescent lamps are proving highly satisfactory.

We are frequently asked about the comparative economy of Fluorescent lighting. Cost of lighting with Fluorescent lamps as with Incandescent bulbs is made up of the following items: cost of electricity, cost of lamp renewals, maintenance, and interest and depreciation on the investment in fixtures and equipment. In the case of Fluorescent lamps, there is certain auxiliary equipment necessary for their operation. All these factors must be weighed along with the recognized values of lighting results. Good lighting, whether Fluorescent or Incandescent, doesn't come ready-made. Good lighting must be tailored to fit the job. That is why it is impossible to make any definite statement about the relative costs of Fluorescent versus Incandescent lighting without a complete knowledge of individual situations. In some cases the cost may be higher, in others lower.

Is Fluorescent lighting practical for your business? What equipment shall you select? What about installation costs? The answers to these and many other related questions are available to you without charge or obligation through the services of our lighting specialists. These men are thoroughly familiar with Fluorescent lighting and other types as well. They have no equipment to sell, but they will be glad to give you the benefit of their experience. We invite you to use this service.

They were sorry to miss the movies on Mexico but will surely go to the next meeting which will be in April or May.

The Mokena Juniors must get busy now and make some things for Easter for the children who are less fortunate than we are. Nut cups, decorated napkins and Braille Easter card covers have been asked for from Chapter headquarters. It will be interesting to see what the children themselves want to do.

The branch officers wonder if it would be possible to get a group who would be interested in making garments for the Red Cross. A church Ladies Aid might take some things or possibly some from the P. T. A., or Band Parents Association. These things are all needed and the officers would appreciate any plan that might be worked out along these lines. There has been such fine co-operation on the Red Cross Roll Call work the last few years, it is felt now that since this appeal has been made, Mokena will not fail in her duty to those in other lands who need these garments.

Red Cross Chairman.

Need for Truck
Inspection Starts

Official inspections required by the Illinois Truck Act are revealing the fact that the law was greatly needed in this state, according to F. Wood Lewis, superintendent of the division of Motor Carriers of the Department of Public Works and Buildings, which is administering the law. The inspections have been in progress for several weeks in some sections of the state, according to Mr. Lewis, and a total of over 200 garages have already been authorized to make the tests in order to provide facilities for the 250,000 trucks subject to the provisions of the act.

Inspection stations report that the law is being favorably received by responsible truck owners and drivers, many of whom have been surprised at defects found in their vehicles, and thankful that they were found before a serious accident resulted. A surprising number of drivers are unaware of faulty brakes or steering until they drive through the safety lanes. When these conditions have been pointed out the owner is always more than willing to correct the mechanical condition so the official seal of approval may be affixed to his windshield.

The new law becomes effective on March 1 and requires all trucks in the state, except those owned by the U. S. Government and those engaged exclusively in interstate commerce, to pass official inspection by a bonded authorized station. Brakes, lights, steering, rear view mirrors, windshield wipers, and other safety devices must pass a minimum standard. These legal requirements are only 3500 candlepower to pass the actual far below the safety minimum built into the trucks originally. Lights with 20,000 candlepower or more when new are required to have headlight test, though proper aim is demanded. Brakes must be sufficient to stop within 30 feet from 20 miles per hour. Because of these low requirements, Mr. Lewis pointed out, no truck owner would be justified in objecting to the inspections.

It is interesting to note that the owner of the first truck to be inspected under the act stated that he had been proud of his truck because the brakes had never given him trouble in two years of use. He sincerely believed that they were in good condition until the inspection revealed that one rear wheel had practically no brakes whatever. When the operator was shown the true condition of the brakes, he was eager to have the necessary adjustments made.

The most frequent cause of rejection is badly aimed headlights, a serious hazard but one requiring only a few minutes to correct. The opinion most often expressed by truck drivers is that the headlight aiming and brake requirements, while much needed for trucks, should also be applied to passenger cars.

Drivers and owners alike are heartily in favor of the steering gear inspection since properly adjusted wheels result in easier steering and a substantial saving in tire wear. One owner remarked that he could save the equivalent of the small charge for inspection in one short trip with his truck, due to the elimination of "side slip" and the resultant saving in tire wear! Wheel alignment also has a marked influence on driver fatigue, misaligned wheels causing the driver to tire easily.

All the provisions of the act are directed toward the safety of the public but the result will also be a decrease in maintenance costs for truck operators since it will obviously be less expensive to correct mechanical defects early, rather than wait until they develop into expensive repair jobs. Most truckers, it was pointed out, are able to make minor adjustments themselves but are not equipped to make extensive repairs.

No difficulties will be encountered in enforcement of the act, Lewis explained, because the state police are also under the jurisdiction of the Department of Public Works and Buildings. Ample funds for enforcing have also been provided and the state police have instructions to see that all trucks abide by the law. Penalty for failure to comply will be refusal to grant a license or, in more serious cases, a fine or imprisonment or both.

One section of the law requires used trucks to pass the inspections before sale, but even new trucks must bear the official seal of approval, proving the vehicle to be in acceptable condition before an operating license will be granted.

Officials in charge of the administration of the Truck Act have been pleased by the favorable reception it has received at the hands of all individuals affected, and the interest shown by officials in other states contemplating similar legislation.

HELPFUL SON

DIFFICULT DECISIONS

By GLUYAS WILLIAMS

The angler was relating a fishing story to his neighbors. "Yes," he said, proudly, "I caught the biggest fish of my career last night. It was a bass, and weighed seven pounds, two ounces." His small son, who had been listening, chipped in: "Yes, and daddy was so kind he gave it to my kitten."

Lobster

The waiter was taking the order of a pretty girl who was accompanied by a pudgy middle-aged man. When she did not mention the lobster included in the meal she ordered, he asked: "And how about the lobster?" To which the fair lady replied: "Oh, he can order whatever he likes."

X-Things to make

HERE is a new department that we know is going to meet with tremendous popularity with our readers, for it brings you the opportunity of combining pleasure and profit. With jig, coping or keyhole saw, you may cut these designs from wallboard, plywood or thin lumber. Each pattern brings accurate outline of the design, and complete directions for making or painting. Men, women, boys and girls are finding this a fascinating pastime, and with each order will be sent a circular showing many additional novelties which you may make at home.

Today, we are showing a yard design that will appeal to many, for the long-ago days of "Gone With the Wind" are recalled vividly in these charming cutout figures. Your own imagination might turn them into the vibrant Scarlett O'Hara and the reserved Melanie Wilkes in person. And your jig or coping saw plus a bit of wallboard or plywood will produce these figures for your yard.

Each comes on its own pattern. The beflowered hoop skirt lady at the left is about 24 inches tall and is given on Z9067, 15 cents—she holds a box for flowers. The belle at the right is on pattern Z9068, 15 cents—about 24 inches tall, and a sprinkling can is in her hand.

Order numbers Z9067 and Z9068, 15 cents each, from: Aunt Martha, Box 166-W, Kansas City, Mo.

To Check Constipation Get at Its Cause!

If constipation has you down so you feel heavy, tired and dopey, it's time you did something about it. And something more than just taking a physic! You should get at the cause of the trouble. If you eat the super-refined food most people eat, the chances are the difficulty is simple—you don't get enough "bulk." And "bulk" doesn't mean heavy food. It's a kind of food that isn't consumed in the body, but leaves a soft, bulky mass in the intestines. If this common form of constipation is your trouble, eat Kellogg's All-Bran regularly, and drink plenty of water. All-Bran isn't a medicine—it's a crunchy, toasted cereal. And it will help you not only to get regular but to keep regular. Made by Kellogg's in Battle Creek. If your condition is chronic, it is wise to consult a physician.

KALTENBORN SAYS:

Enemies Stalemated After 6 Months Because Defense Outshines Offense

By H. V. KALTENBORN
Noted Radio Commentator.

AT THE end of the first six months of war we find that the major belligerents have not yet begun to fight, while the major neutral powers have begun to fight for peace. Small wonder that the late Senator Borah called this a "phoney" war.

Only in Finland is there a major military effort and mighty Soviet Russia does not even admit that she has gone to war against little Finland. When the war began no one expected Soviet Russia to participate in military operations and no one expected Finland to be invaded. On the other hand, everyone expected an immediate air-raid by hundreds of bombing-planes on the capitals of Europe, and for weeks the headlines spoke of the coming big offensives on the Maginot and Siegfried lines. Neither the raids nor the offensives developed during the first half-year of fighting. Why?

Defense Is Major Factor.

The primary reason is that in modern war, defense is stronger than offense. The war in Spain showed the world that air attack on large cities is tremendously destructive, but it also showed that it is not likely to be decisive. The expense in planes, fuel, bombs and aviators who do not return is apt to offset the military advantages gained in any mass bombing flight. And the effect on neutral opinion of the killing of thousands of women and children, together with the destruction of historic monuments in cities far away from any actual fighting zone, might well be disastrous.

The fear of such wholesale air-raids led France and Britain to surrender at Munich. Now, after a year and a half of additional intensive preparation for air-defense, they no longer fear German attack. They are prepared to meet it and could make it so costly that it would probably not be repeated. The successful defense of the Mannerheim line against the most highly concentrated Soviet military effort showed the strength of defense fortifications in modern war.

Why Poland Was Weak.

The two great surprises of this war so far have been Poland's weakness and Finland's strength. Poland's weakness arose from a lack of national unity and domination of the illiterate masses by an aristocratic caste. In the larger sense, the government of Poland was nei-or indirectly through the air-waves. Nazi leaders are apprehensive about casualties in the propaganda battle. They impose severe punishment on anyone who listens to a foreign broadcast. The British and French, on the other hand, have enough confidence in their people to permit them to listen to whatever Dr. Goebbels orders said.

BRITAIN GUARDS THE SEA—Somewhere in the North sea a multiple anti-aircraft gun aboard a British mine sweeper watches for enemy raiders.

More Activity on Sea.

At sea, a war of movement has been possible. This is why there has been much more activity at sea than on land. Britain's control of the sea has again demonstrated its importance. The German fleet is bottled up. Except for submarines, the German navy and the German Merchant Marine have been swept from the seas.

The Near Eastern Franco-British army of half a million men under the leadership of General Weygand is now waiting in Syria, ready for instant action against Russia or Germany in any part of the Balkans. This army may yet prove the decisive military factor in this war. Allied victories in Palestine and Turkey presaged the collapse of the Central Powers in 1918.

Germany's commerce - raiders were swept from the seas much more quickly than during the World war. The Graf Spee lies wrecked in Montevideo harbor after being put out of action by the combined efforts of three small British cruis-etic mine sown by the Germans proved very destructive for the first few weeks in which it was used. Then more effective mine-sweeping methods and the establishment of narrow ship-channels which were carefully patrolled reduced the successes of Germany's mine-laying airplanes.

British Also Unsuccessful.

On the other hand, the British have been no more successful in their raids against the German navy. Both German and British submarines have destroyed an occasional warship, but these forays have been costly to the submarines attempting them. The British and French claim to have sunk between 40 and 50 German submarines since the beginning of the war. The Germans admit the loss of less than half this number. Yet whenever a submarine is lost, the entire crew is lost with it, and it takes five years to train men to handle a submarine under war conditions.

Talk about the Germans building one submarine a day is nothing more than talk. It is more likely that the Germans are completing anywhere from six to ten U-boats a month, which is just about the rate at which they are being destroyed.

Already Planning for Peace.

There is, then, nothing decisive in action at sea or in the air. Defense is stronger than attack. But what about the economic front? That is probably the most important front of all and the one that will be dominant long after the war has ended. Already Secretary of State Hull is negotiating with the neutral powers to work out a plan of economic reconstruction. The plan must be ready for instant application on the day of the armistice if Europe is not to sink into chaos when the fighting ends.

Every country in Europe, neutral and belligerent alike, has mortgaged its future. Only if the New world remains out of the war and stands ready to lend its resources for European reconstruction is there any hope of true peace. Europe was ready for revolution before the war came and will be much more ready for it when the war is done.

What After Collapse?

France and Britain count on economic pressure to bring about the collapse of Germany, but one wonders whether they have asked themselves, what then? Will they march into Germany at the head of a victorious army, establish a new Kaiser and a new Junker government? Or will they stand aside while Germany's underground Communist movement re-asserts itself and calls out for assistance to the Red brethren in Moscow?

There is the third possibility of organizing those liberal forces that have either been driven out of Germany or driven under cover within Germany, and helping them to re-establish constitutional government by granting them a generous peace. That would be the hardest task.

Rumania Under Pressure.

Meanwhile, there is more pressure behind the economic than behind the military war. Members of the Rumanian government are being bribed, bulldozed, flattered and cajoled by both sides. Both are seeking to purchase Rumania's oil and Rumania's grain. Each wants it so that the other cannot have it. The French and British offer gold, the Germans threaten war. So far, King Carol has kept a precarious balance; Britain and France continue to guarantee his frontiers and King Carol remembers the Blitzkrieg against Poland. Poland had been given the same guarantees.

On the diplomatic front, the Allied powers won their greatest victory in winning Turkey to their cause. This gives them control of the Dardanelles and the Black Sea, in case of war with Russia. It also assures France and Britain complete dominance of the Mediterranean thereby discouraging Italy from siding with Germany.

pelled to eat in the basement or kitchen and many resorted to using laps for tables, eating in the balcony. The affair was reported as the biggest of its kind in the history of Boy Scouts in this area and it was stated by the speaker, Mr. Thomas J. Keane of New York, that for a Council the size of the Potawatomi Trails Council, he had never before attended a council meeting having such a large attendance.

Henry Heideman, Harvey, president of the Potawatomi Trails council acted as toastmaster for the program which followed the dinner. Mr. Heideman introduced the editors of papers who were present and also members of the Boy Scout Executive board. Scoutmasters, Cubmasters of the 58 units of the council were presented with a special booklet on Scouting as a token of appreciation for their fine service during the past year. Attendance awards given to units having 10 or more parents present were awarded to Packs 1, Harvey; 2, Flossmoor; 3, Homewood; 6, Steger; 8, Midlothian; 10, Markham; and 11, Forest Ridge; Troops 1 and 42, Homewood; 3, 4 and 76, Harvey; 6, Flossmoor; 7, Chicago Heights; 8, Steger; 9, Riverdale; 15, Midlothian; 16 and 17, Dolton; 25, Thornton; 33, Crete; 39, Hazelcrest; 40, Mokena; 50, Markham; 53, Tinley Park; 52, Forest Ridge; Ships 121, Harvey; 122, Midlothian.

Vincennes Trail District chairman, Harvey; and E. H. Abbott, national representative and member of Executive board, Chicago Heights; Scouts and Scouters who died during the past year. As the names were read, a candle was lighted for each.

Mr. Thomas J. Keane, New York, National Director of Senior Scouting, gave an address of the evening, "Scouting, the Bulwark of Democracy." Following his address, a dramatization, "Through Scouting to Citizenship" was given by Cubs and Scouts of Homewood, Senior Scouts of Flossmoor and Sea Scouts of Harvey and Midlothian. This dramatization depicted the life of a boy from Cubbing through Scouting to Senior Scouting and eventually to citizenship. Allan Besterfield, Troop 42, Homewood, received the Eagle Award as a part of the ceremony. In the closing ceremony, Uncle Sam, who was portrayed by Gilbert Fink, Scoutmaster of Troop 33, Crete, and the Scout trained citizen, Alvin Gold, Homewood, appeared in the center of the stage. The entire audience stood and sang, "God Bless America" as Scouts and Cubs saluted Uncle Sam.
